Guess how many forestland owners in North Carolina are women?

Before you answer that question, consider attending this special workshop and field tour designed for family forestland owners who just happen to be women. The workshop will also be of interest to men who wish to support a woman in their family or community who is in line to inherit or acquire forestland in the future.

Tour stops on a working tree farm are scheduled for the morning (tram transportation will be provided). Participants will hear and see examples of forest management for various financial and ecological objectives. A lunch will be served after the tour, followed by additional speakers who are experts in topics such as:

- Property Taxes
- Cost Share Programs
- Selling Timber
- Estate Planning
- Federal Timber Taxes

Participants automatically receive free publications on forest management and a copy of the very popular new book, "Conserving Working Lands" from NC State University Extension Forestry.

Private and family forest landowners, thanks to financial support of granting organizations and private sponsorships by local companies, you are invited to attend this event at no charge. We only ask that you register in advance so we can keep a headcount for lunch.

Advanced registration is required, but participation is FREE!

Call NC State University at 919-515-9563 or register online at www.ncsu-feop.org/landowners/WFWhome.html

Deadline to register is Friday, June 3, 2016.
